New Support Group For Parents and Caregivers of Children/Adolescents Diagnosed with, or Suspected of Having, Bipolar and Other Mood Disorders

by Suzi Glorioso

Parent Resource and Support Group, a newly-formed support group for parents and caregivers of children/adolescents (ages 4 to 17) diagnosed with, or suspected of having, bipolar and other mood disorders will hold its first meeting at the Pathways to Wellness Clinic at 5674 Stoneridge Dr., Suite 116 in Pleasanton from 7 to 9 PM every first Tuesday of the month, starting on September 5th. The Parent Resource and Support Group is a committee within the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) Tri-Valley affiliate. Parents and caregivers are welcome and encouraged to attend.

Bipolar disorder is thought to affect over one million children in this country alone, but it is often mistaken for ADHD or depression. It is estimated that one-third of the children who are being diagnosed with attention-deficit disorder with hyperactivity are actually suffering from early symptoms of bipolar disorder. A recent study that examined children who first had bouts of depression reported that almost 50% went on to manifest the bipolar form of the disorder.

The cardinal symptoms of early-onset bipolar disorder are rapid shifts in mood: the child can veer from irritable, easily annoyed, angry mood states to silly, goofy, giddy elation and then just as easily descend into low energy periods of intense boredom, depression, and social withdrawal, fraught with self-recrimination and suicidal thoughts. These abrupt shifts in mood can occur several times a day. Temper tantrums – rages – that go on for protracted periods and during which the child can become very aggressive are also common, as are grandiose thinking and behavior, racing thoughts, and a decreased need for sleep. These children are very often oppositional and defiant and may suffer severe separation anxiety, night terrors, distractibility, and impulsivity. It is not uncommon for a child to have more than one diagnosis that fall under the mood disorder spectrum.

Some children have co-morbid learning differences and consequently experience difficulties sustaining themselves in various school settings. This often results in school becoming particularly challenging and stressful for all. Education issues such as navigating the special education maze to receive individually appropriate services for their children will be an important focus.

Families dealing with such an ill child can quickly become exhausted, traumatized, and isolated, and this new group intends to provide support, friendship, information and referrals to parents, grandparents, siblings and friends. We are parent-led, informal and provide an open agenda discussion in which parents can tell their stories, trade information, and give and gain support. Occasionally a guest speaker will be featured to provide us with the most current information and enlightened discussion specific to our children's illnesses. We will share books, research articles and attend symposiums to further our knowledge of pediatric bipolar and other mood disorders.

President's Outlook

NAMI Tri-Valley is growing by leaps and bounds and with it instant recognition. Thanks to Dede Ranahan, San Francisco Bay Area NAMI Walk Director, Krista Radojevich and NAMI Tri-Valley will receive national attention in the quarterly NAMI Advocate magazine published by NAMI National. Krista is asked to write about her experience at the last NAMI Walk as team captain of the Tri-Valley Bipolar Bears. Additionally, the other two teams, the Brainiacs, led by Mike and Carole Koslosky and the Tri-Valley Newbees will contribute to the effort. Krista will also be videotaped in a 2 to 3 minute interview to talk about NAMI Tri-Valley, which will be integrated into the NAMI Walk 2007 video that is distributed nationally. Thank you Krista!

NAMI Tri-Valley has quickly rooted into our communities and far beyond. This brings to mind the importance of thanking all the people who have devoted their time, insight and understanding toward the importance of educating the public about mental illness. For those who are out delivering newsletters, fliers, information, finding the time in their busy schedules to attend some of the meetings and support groups, you are the real heroes. Without you, the dream to improve lives for consumers and families would not be there.

It surprises me when I think of all the generous past board members who were major players in developing and shaping who we are now. In the beginning, there was a core group planning the birth of a new affiliate and that was only 18 months ago.

There are numerous people to thank such as Catherine Kuo, Jennifer Garrison, and Francine Radojevich. Many thanks to Frank Foster for developing treasurer responsibilities that define how we operate. Conversely, new people have joined to help navigate NAMI Tri-Valley. A gracious thank-you is in order to the board, which is comprised of Robert Villanueva, Co-President, Krista Radojevich, Vice President, Rochelle Margucci, Treasurer, and Suzi Glorioso, Secretary.

The list doesn't stop at board members as we have a dynamic group of leaders that are responsible for a number of committees and programs. NAMI Tri-Valley has a lending library thanks to Carole Koslosky and her ability to trade in used books in order to acquire books on mental health and mental illnesses. Mike Koslosky, who developed the newsletter "Brainstorm" also edits the publication and Jennifer Garrison maintains the website and database. NAMI Tri-Valley has added a new support group, Parent Resource and Support, facilitated by Suzi Glorioso.

A heartfelt thank-you to Donna and Russ White as they have worked tirelessly teaching Family To Family each year and for their dedication facilitating a monthly family/caregiver support meeting.

Krista Radojevich and Robert Villanueva run the In Our Own Voice program in Pleasanton and are California State Trainers, which means they train fellow consumers to speak at In Our Own Voice presentations. I might add that Krista and Robert are the only state trainers in California!

Yes, NAMI Tri-Valley is young and growing, but as Krista aptly wrote recently: "We (NAMI Tri-Valley) may be small in membership numbers, but large in spirit and dedication to making the Tri-Valley a better place for those with mental illness."

President, NAMI Tri-Valley

How About That NAMI Walk?

It shouldn't come as a surprise to you that our fledgling affiliate successfully raised over $15,000 in the recent NAMI Walk fund-raiser. With only three teams NAMI Tri-Valley was one of the top finishers in the entire Bay Area. In fact, NAMI National will be featuring us in the Advocate, NAMI's quarterly publication as a positive example of the power of enthusiasm, determination, and internet pledging. Way to go teams: NAMI Tri-Valley Bipolar Bears NAMI Tri-Valley Newbees, NAMI Tri-Valley Brainiacs. . . and all your supporters. Funds received from the walk will support our education programs, training sessions, and support groups
